Hi [REDACTED]

I understand from [REDACTED] that you decided not to take up the offer of a meeting with us today- I would really welcome a chance to speak, can you suggest a good time? I'm working tomorrow morning until 12 (finish 3.30 today) and about all next week.

Your query to [REDACTED] (attached) has also come to me and [REDACTED] to respond to – we have been involved in the moderation decisions thus far [REDACTED] [REDACTED] so are best placed to shed light on your questions and try to resolve any concerns that you haven't been able to deal with via conversation with your line manager

In the meantime a further update for you-

This morning a decision has (as anticipated) been taken to review the entire Yammer thread, and a methodology agreed to address remaining comments of concern. Work on this has begun and the aim is to conclude it as soon as possible- realistically due to the volume of comments requiring follow up, I expect this to be completed by the end of next week.

If you have already made a list of remaining comments [REDACTED], please do send it to me and I'll ensure they are considered in this process (but I'm confident they're likely to be picked up anyway so please don't create additional work for yourself)

By way of some reassurance there is ongoing discussion about what more should be done to further review the entire thread. We have simply been swamped with volume to deal with but are indeed taking this very seriously. The imminent publication of EA version of Yammer guidance will also help.

Take care

Hi [REDACTED]

Thanks for keeping in touch.

To confirm, 8 comments have been moderated (including [REDACTED] and line managers of those individuals have been contacted to follow up. There may be further moderation of comments on the thread next week, after [REDACTED] (head of HR) posts an overarching message (expected imminently) and additional guidance about Yammer/ respectful internal communication is published.
